A word from the Praeses

Hello fellow students!

This week is again a good one, because it marks the start of our Business Relations year.
On Wednesday, the EA students have their Sector Night!
But I already hear you asking: “What in the world is a Sector Night?”

It’s a career event where you can meet companies right on our own campus. Industry leaders set up booths in the atrium, so you can talk to them in a familiar setting.

Be there, be prepared, and be proactive. Don’t just walk up to a recruiter and say, “Hi, I’m just looking around. Can you tell me what you do?” They hear that all night, and it doesn’t make a good impression. Instead, research the companies beforehand, pick a few you’re curious about, and ask direct questions, such as what a typical first year looks like in the company or which skills they value most in new graduates. Think outside of the box! (but not too far 😉)

See you in the atrium on Wednesday!

Frituursnack of the week

The Bicky burger:
good food should be served in great packaging

Some people go to McDonald's, others swear by Burger King. But in Belgium, there's one burger that can turn an ordinary trip to the frituur into a extraordinary experience: the Bicky Burger. With its soft bun, juicy burger, crispy onions, pickles and unmistakable combination of sauces, this Belgian icon has earned itself a place in the hearts (and stomachs) of students across the country. And to make it even better: this amazing creation has many sisters, like the Bicky Chicken, Bicky Mexicano and Bicky Fish. The Bicky Burger first appeared in 1981 and has been a frituur favourite ever since. While other burgers were busy trying to look fancy with brioche buns and gourmet toppings, the Bicky kept things simple. 'Less is more', right? And let's be honest: eating a Bicky is rarely a clean experience. The sauce ends up on dripping all over your fingers, the onions escape from the bun, and by the final bite, your napkin has become more of a suggestion than a solution. But that's part of the experience, this burger is not trying to be elegant or sophisticated.

Now what truly makes a Bicky a Bicky is its unmistakable packaging. In fact, the brand takes its identity so seriously that in 2019, it managed to spark a nationwide controversy over a fake burger. They launched a campaign, titled "Fake Bicky fwa?", featuring a cartoon showing a man punching a woman because she had served him a Bicky in a white box instead of the iconic green one.

The idea was to warn customers against fake, wannabe Bickys, but they did not receive the reaction they were expecting, as some critics said that the advert made light of domestic violence. There were hundreds of complaints made, forcing Bicky Burger to pull the images from its social media channels and issue an apology.

Moral of the story? Fake Bickys might be a crime against burger culture, but punching someone over a cardboard box is definitely not the solution.

Business Relations

Our amazing BR team is responsible for not only financing our amazing activities, but is also (and maybe even more importantly) responsible for connecting students with companies! This is possible through their networking events like the sector nights or the job fair. This can help you, the students at Group T, with finding a future job, an internship, writing your thesis and much more!

Good Eats

Foodplace of the week: Yum Yum Sushi

Located on Tiensestraat, a street well-known for its food hotspots, lies an address that doesn't get enough credit. A little further from the popular chain restaurants, at Tiensestraat 90 you will find Yum Yum Sushi, an absolute must-know for students. Affordable sushi is a rare sight and if you want to take it a step further, they offer student deals you simply can't pass up! Be sure to order for pick-up because they will add a hefty delivery fee.

Yum Yum Sushi is perfect for a quick but elevated meal with fresh sushi every day. Don't let the exterior scare you off, their generous portions and kind service make this spot one-of-a-kind.
